Change of Draperies.

Housekeepers are just now interested n the new fall curtains and draperies, because, however serviceable such furnishings may be, they certainly wear out in time and need replenishing, while there are some persons who, liking novelty, prefer buying only inexpensive materials that will probably last but a single season. The next year these draperies are cut up to make utility bags, covers for furniture during sweeping. soft dusters, etc., while new curtains take their place.

When it is possible to buy artistic-looking fabrics and designs at little cost, the early change seems commendable. Now that houses are kept at such a high temperature in winter, dark, heavy hangings are entirely unnecessary, the light, washable fabrics being preferable

It is astonishing what beautiful curtains come in Nottingham nowadays, in the cheaper grades. I saw recently a new design that was such good style I could scarcely believe the price was so low. A broad lace stripe alternated with one of a plain weave, the latter having all the appearance of linen. For a window that required shutting off a little I can imagine nothing more tasteful or effec-

One could buy a very pretty pair of Nottingham curtains suitable for the living room of a small parior, the designs equal to those at much higher prices. The same may be said of the imitation Brussels lace curtains. The bobbinet curtains will be used a very great deal this season in parlors, libraries, dining rooms and bedrooms, different styles being chosen to suit the rooms. For bedrooms, there are very nice curtains in a good quality of bobbinet, trimmed with renaissance. Another line is recommended for dining room or library. The net is substantial and decorated above a deep hem with a leaf and scroll design applied in Marie Antoinette effect, which gives weight and richness to the curtain. It comes in white and arabe and measures forty inches nd arabe and measures forty inches by Cluny lace as a decoration is a little newer than the renaissance, though the latter is selling as steadily as ever. Irish latter is selling as steadily as ever. Irish point, too, is as popular as ever. The vine center in the Irish point curtains is new and to my thinking an improvement.

A group of four different designs on exhibition struck me as being extremely good value for the money. The first was of net hemmed and edged with a narrow cluny lace and trimmed within the hem with a broad band of cluny insertion forty-five inches by three yards and one ty-five inches by three yards and one could choose from white or arabe. The second was in Irish point the same size as the cluny, but in white only. The Marie Antoinette curtains measured a few inches more than the other kind and were really most artistic, displaying a lovely design in applicate design in applique.

The last was a renaissance lace curtain with a very beautiful inset within the hem of the lace on net of an excellent quality. A narrow lace edging on the hem gave a very dainty finish. It came in white only. If one wished to pay less, there were very pretty curtains in renaissance suitable for sitting room or library, also pates. able for sitting room or library; also pat-terns in Marie Antoinette. The center terns in Marie Antoinette. The center and deep hem were of the colonial block design, and the decoration a wide border of graceful sprays or roses. A Brussels pattern carried out in No ingham was recommended as giving good service. It could be bought in white only and measured after tracks by three yards. ured fifty inches by three yards.
Colored curtains, as the barred madras, Colored curtains, as the barred madras, will not be used very much. It is always more in demand as a summer than a winter drapery, and people prefer buying it by the yard rather than by the curtain.

Colored Nottingham is bidding for favor. This drapery comes in one and two tones, as a golden tan on black, and brown on pale tan. When one desires the effect of warmth without weight or to shut out light, these colored Nottinghams will be excellent.

Beautiful floral and satin stripes on plain backgrounds are included in the display—just the right thing for making up into sea-senable scarfs, light wraps, etc. There are also all-over floral effects, both large and small, which will answer splendidly for separate waists, whole gowns, dra-peries and trimmings for evening dresses, lining thin coats, hat trimmings, fancy work and a dozen other uses that will

The reign of the one-piece dress must be over if the number and variety of new belts are any indication. Not in some seasons past has the display been so large. The shaped black patent leather belt will be "the" belt for wear with tailored gowns this season, with suede and veivet to be worn with more important afternoon dresses. For evening wear the latest belt is of bullion, the heaviest of gold thread being employed in the weaving. The closings are, respectively, dull Roman gold, cut steel and French grayish silver. Ten dollars is not an unusual price to pay for one of these handsome accessories.
